

Tuition Payments

Many parents who consider the possibility of Christian Education for their children are concerned about the cost that they incur when they enroll their children in a private school. Often times, they fail to pursue the idea because of preconceived notions that the cost would be exorbitant and beyond their financial status. Although one cannot deny that private education represents double taxation for those who participate, it is interesting to note, nevertheless, that many of our parents have discovered that proper budgeting, accompanied by adjusted priority values, have proven that Christian education is within the means of the majority of families. When compared to many of the material possessions that we give to our children, Christian education stands alone as the only everlasting gift that we can bestow upon them.

Fee Coverage

1. The Tuition Fee partially covers the cost of educating each student. Other sources of revenue, such as church support and individual gifts, are included in meeting overall operational costs.
